Abstract

Two interference tests were performed at Forsmark with borehole HFM14 used as pumping borehole. HFM14 is situated by drill site 5 in the north-western part of the candidate area. It is approximately 150 m long and inclined c. 60° north by north-west. The tests were performed in order to increase the understanding of the hydraulic conditions in the northern part of the candidate area at Forsmark. The main purpose of the interference tests was to document how different fracture zones in the upper part of the rock are connected hydraulically, to quantify their hydraulic properties and to clarify whether there are any hydraulic boundaries in the area. Of special interest are those pressure responses that propagate downwards via deformation zones within the area influenced by the pumping in HFM14, for instance the deformation zones that intersect KFM01A-, -02A, -04A, -05A, -06A and -10A.

The interference tests were performed by pumping in HFM14 and at the same time monitoring pressure responses in different observation sections in surrounding boreholes. All boreholes monitored for potential responses are part of the HMS, the Hydro Monitoring System. In total, 105 observation sections in 36 observation boreholes were included in the interference test. 12 of the 36 boreholes are core-drilled and have 55 sections included in the interference test. 24 boreholes are percussion-drilled with a total of 50 sections. In addition six wells, monitoring the quaternary deposits, were included in the first interference test: SFM001, SFM013, SFM023, SFM030, SFM058 and SFM062. All show some response to pumping in HFM14. The results from the monitoring wells are reported in Appendix 4. Only one observation borehole, KFM10A, containing two sections was included in the second interference test.

The flow period in the first, main interference test lasted for approximately three weeks and the subsequent recovery was measured for about six days. Activities in the area influenced the pressure in many observations sections which made a longer recovery time impossible. The pumping flow rate in HFM14 was relatively constant at c. 348 L/min during the flow period, resulting in a final drawdown in the pumping borehole of about 12 m. These values indicate a specific capacity (~transmissivity) of $5 \cdot 10^{-4}$ $m^2/s$ which is a high value. The capacity of the well was, in conjunction with drilling, estimated at about 36 000 L/h, which is c. 60 times more than a Swedish standard well in fractured rock.

The second interference test was much shorter with a flow period of approximately 3 days and where recovery was measured for c. 2 days. The pumping flow rate was similar to that used in the first test and so was the reached final drawdown. The second interference test was performed in order to get information about borehole KFM10A which was not yet fitted with monitoring equipment for the HMS in time for the first interference test.

Out of the 105 observation sections included in the interference tests, 28 did not respond at all to pumping in HFM14 or responded very weakly. Of the remaining 77 sections, 69 showed distinct pressure responses. Two observation sections stand out as responding most strongly. These sections, KFM10A: 401–500 m and HFM15: 85–95 m, together with 6 other sections, HFM15: 0–84 m, HFM19: 168–182 m, KFM01B: 0–100 m, HFM13: 0–100 m, HFM19: 104–167 m and KFM01B: 101–141m, display responses that are distinct enough to be characterized as potential zone responses between HFM14 and the actual sections.

Significant responses were also observed in the cored borehole sections KFM02A: 411–442 m and KFM02A: 440–518 m located at c. 1,600 m from the pumping borehole. Also, responses were observed in KFM04A: 169–1,001 m and in KFM06A: 341–362 m located c. 800 m from HFM14. In addition weak responses were indicated in the deep sections in KFM06A: 738–748 and KFM06A: 749–826.

Five observation sections, HFM13: 159–173 m, KFM06A: 341–362 m, KFM02A: 411–442 m, KFM02A: 490–518 m and KFM04A: 169–1,001 m, as well as the pumping borehole were evaluated quantitatively using methods for transient evaluation. For the pumping borehole, HFM14, the transmissivity from the transient evaluation was $5.1 \cdot 10^{-4}$ m$^2$/s. Due to the long distances from, and/or relatively bad hydraulic connection to the pumping borehole, the results from the transient evaluation of the observation sections are very uncertain. It is possible that the evaluated transmissivity values reflect the hydraulic conditions close to the pumping borehole rather than the conditions around the evaluated observation boreholes. However, the estimated hydraulic diffusivity based on the response times for the selected sections was in good agreement with the corresponding estimates from the performed transient analysis.

During the entire first interference test a relatively strong decreasing, natural pressure trend prevailed. In addition, several observation sections were influenced by so called tidal effects, and probably to some extent also by changes of the sea level. Primarily due to the tidal effects the pressure data from certain observation sections exhibit an oscillating behaviour.

Sammanfattning

Två interferenstester har genomförts i Forsmark med borrhål HFM14 som pumphål. HFM14 är beläget vid borrplats 5 i den nordvästra delen av kandidatområdet. Det är ca 150 m långt och lutar ca 60° mot NNW. Huvudsyftet med de utförda interferenstesterna är att dokumentera hur spricksystemen i bergets övre delar hänger ihop hydrauliskt, kvantifiera deras hydrauliska egenskaper, samt att klargöra om det finns några hydrauliska gränser inom området. Av särskild betydelse är tryckresponser som fortplantar sig mot djupet i de deformationszoner som har sitt utgående inom influensområdet för pumpbrunnen, exempelvis de deformationszoner som skär KFM01A-, -02A, -04A, 05A, -6A och -10A.

Interferenstesterna utfördes genom att en tryckavsänkning skapades i HFM14 samtidigt som tryckresponser registrerades i olika observationssektioner i ett flertal omgivande borrhål. Alla borrhål som övervakades ingår i SKBs hydromoniteringssystem, HMS. Totalt övervakades 36 borrhål och sammanlagt 105 observationssektioner ingick i interfenstestet. 12 av de 36 hålen är kärnborrhål med sammanlagt 55 observationssektioner, medan 24 är hammarborrhål med sammanlagt 50 observationssektioner. Utöver dessa har även 6 jordrör inkluderats i det första interferenstestet: SFM001, SFM013, SFM023, SFM030, SFM058 och SFM062. Alla jordrör uppvisar någon respons från pumpningen i HFM14. Resultatet från jordrören rapporteras i Appendix 4. Endast ett borrhål, KFM10A, med två observationssektioner ingick i det andra interferenstestet.

Pumpfasen pågick under ca tre veckor för det första interferenstestet och den påföljande återhämtningen registrerades i ungefär sex dagar. Aktiviteter i området påverkade trycket i ett flertal observationssektioner, vilket omöjliggjorde en längre återhämtningsperiod. Pumpflödet från HFM14 låg relativt konstant runt 348 L/min under pumpfasen och resulterade i en slutlig avsänkning i pumpborrhålet av ca 12 m. Dessa värden indikerar en specifik kapacitet (~transmissivitet) av $5 \cdot 10^{-4}$ m$^2$/s, vilket är ett högt värde. Brunnskapaciteten i samband med borrning uppskattades till ca 36 000 L/h, vilket är ca 60 ggr mer än en svensk normalbrunn i sprickigt berg.

Det andra interferenstestet pågick under mycket kortare tid med en pumpfas som pågick i ca 3 dygn och med en efterföljande återhämtningsperiod på ungefär två dygn. Pumpflödet motsvarade flödet från det första testet och även avsänkningen var i stort sett densamma. Det andra interferenstestet utfördes för att få information om borrhålet KFM10A som inte var färdiginstrumenterat med HMS-utrustning i tid för det första interferenstestet.

Av de 105 observationssektioner som ingick i interferenstestet reagerade 28 sektioner inte alls eller bara mycket svagt på avsänkningen i HFM14. Av de återstående 77 sektionerna karaktäriserades 69 sektioner av distinkta tryckresponser. Två observationssektioner uppvisar de allra starkaste tryckresponserna. Dessa sektioner, KFM10A: 401–500 m och HFM15: 85–95 m, tillsammans med 6 andra sektioner, HFM15: 0–84 m, HFM19: 168–182 m, KFM01B: 0–100 m, HFM13: 0–100 m, HFM19: 104–167 m och KFM01B: 101–141 m, uppvisar responser som är distinkta nog att kunna karaktäriseras som potentiella hög-transmissiva zonresponser mellan HFM14 och respektive borrhålssektion.

Signifikanta responser observerades också i de kärnborrade borrhålssektionerna KFM02A: 411–442 m och KFM02A: 440–518 m som ligger ca 1 600 m från pumphålet. Även i KFM04A: 169–1 001 m och KFM06A: 341–362 m som ligger ungefär 800 m från HFM14 noterades responser. Svaga responser erhölls också i de djupa sektionerna KFM06A: 738–748 och KFM06A: 749–826.

Fem observationssektioner, HFM13: 159–173 m, KFM06A: 341–362 m, KFM02A: 411–442 m, KFM02A: 490–518 m och KFM04A: 169–1 001 m, samt pumpborrhålet utvärderades kvantitativt med metoder för transient utvärdering. För pumpborrhålet, HFM14, gav den transienta utvärderingen ett värde för transmissiviteten på $5.1 \cdot 10^{-4}$ $m^2/s$. På grund av de långa avstånden till, och/eller den relativt dåliga hydrauliska kontakten med pumphålet, är resultaten från den transienta utvärderingen av de utvalda observationshålen mycket osäkra. Det är möjligt att de utvärderade transmissiviteterna återspeglar de hydrauliska förhållandena i närheten av pumphålet snarare än förhållandena runt de utvärderade observationshålen. Trots detta stämde den uppskattade hydrauliska diffusiviteten, baserad på responstiderna för de utvalda sektionerna, väl överrens med de korresponderande uppskattningarna från den utförda transienta analysen.

Under hela det första interferenstestet regerade en relativt stark avtagande naturlig trend omgivningarna. Dessutom påverkades många observationssektioner av så kallade tidaleffekter, samt troligen även effekter orsakade av ett föränderligt havsvattenstånd. Framförallt på grund av tidaleffekterna uppvisar vissa berörda sektioner ett oscillerande beteende.

1 Introduction

This report documents the results from two hydraulic interference tests performed within the site investigation at Forsmark. They were performed in order to study how different fracture zones are connected hydraulically in the northern part of the candidate area at Forsmark, to quantify their hydraulic properties and to clarify whether there are any major hydraulic boundaries in the area. The locations of the boreholes involved in the interference tests are shown in Figure 1-1. The tests were carried out in July and August of 2006 by Geosigma AB.

The open percussion drilled borehole HFM14 was used as pumping borehole for the tests and 37 surrounding boreholes served as observation wells. The second interference test was shorter and only included one observation borehole with two observation sections. This borehole was not supplied with borehole equipment for pressure registration when the first test was executed and therefore a second test was added to the original plan.

Figure 1-1. The investigation area at Forsmark including part of the candidate area selected for more detailed investigations. The positions of the boreholes included in the interference tests are displayed as well as the areas corresponding to radii of 500 m, 1,000 m and 2,000 m from HFM14, respectively.

The interference tests were conducted in accordance with activity plan AP PF 400-06-038. In Table 1-1, controlling documents for the performance of this activity are listed. Both the activity plan and method descriptions are internal controlling documents of SKB.

From pumping tests and flow logging, /1/, performed prior to the interference tests, the total transmissivity of the pumping borehole, HFM14, was estimated at c. $5.7 \cdot 10^{-4}$ $m^2/s$.

2 Objectives

The main aim of hydraulic interference tests is to get support for interpretations of geologic structures in regard to their hydraulic and geometric properties deduced from single-hole tests. Furthermore, an interference test may provide information about the hydraulic connectivity and hydraulic boundary conditions within the tested area. Finally, interference tests make up the basis for calibration of numerical models of the area.

The interference tests, with borehole HFM14 as pumping borehole, were performed in order to increase the understanding of the hydraulic conditions in the northern part of the candidate area at Forsmark. The primary aim of the interference tests were to document how different fracture zones are connected hydraulically, to quantify their hydraulic properties and to clarify whether there are any major hydraulic boundaries in the area.

The interference tests were performed by pumping in the open percussion drilled borehole HFM14 and monitoring pressure responses in different observation sections in surrounding boreholes. All boreholes monitored for responses are part of the Forsmark HMS, the Hydro Monitoring System. In total, 105 observation sections in 36 observation boreholes were included in the interference tests.

The second test was performed only to include observation borehole KFM10A in the analysis. This borehole was not yet ready for observation by the time the first interference test commenced. Only two sections in borehole KFM10A were included in the second, shorter interference test.

3 Scope

3.1 Boreholes tested

Technical data of the boreholes tested are presented in Table 3-1. Six of the boreholes that, in the Activity Plan, were intended to be included in the interference tests did for various reasons not supply any pressure data and were therefore excluded from the tests. These borehole sections are still presented in tables in this report but no pressure data are available. The excluded boreholes are KFM01D, KFM07A, KFM09B, KFM08A, HFM25 and KFM09A. In this report boreholes are presented in order of distance from the pumping borehole, i.e. the borehole closest to HFM14 is presented first and the borehole furthest away from HFM14 is presented last. The reference point in the boreholes is always top of casing (ToC). The Swedish National coordinate system (RT90 2.5 gon V 0:–15) is used in the x-y-direction together with RHB70 in the z-direction. The coordinates of the boreholes at ground surface are shown in Table 3-2. All section positions are given as length along the borehole (not vertical distance from ToC).

[1)] Section not used during the interference test in HFM14.

3.2 Tests performed

The borehole sections involved in the interference tests in HFM14 are listed in Table 3-3. The times referred to in Table 3-3 are the chosen start and stop times of downloaded data files used for evaluation. Alternatively, for the pumping borehole, the times referred to are the relevant times included in the original file produced by the data logger. The amount of data extracted from HMS, the Hydro Monitoring System, from the observation boreholes was chosen so as to receive an appropriate amount of data that would correspond to available data from the pumping borehole, HFM14, as well as giving adequate information about the pressure conditions prior to as well as after the performed interference test. HMS is registering pressure continuously.

The column “Test section” In Table 3-3 reports the nominal section length. It should be noted, however, that the upper part of the upper section in most boreholes are cased to some depth. The casing length of each borehole can be found in Table 3-1. The hydraulically active section, used for instance when calculating the point of application, is, as a consequence of this, shorter than the nominal length which would explain the discrepancy between the length reported in column “Section length” and the column “Test section” (both given in Table 3-1).

Two separate hydraulic interference tests were actually performed and are presented in this report. The second interference test was added to the plan after the first test was concluded to be able to include observation borehole KFM10A in the analysis.

The test performance was according to the Geosigma quality plan ("Kvalitetsplan för SKB uppdrag – Hydrauliskt interferenstest med hammarborrhål HFM14 som pumphål, K586087, Kristoffer Gokall-Norman, 2006-06-02", Geosigma and SKB internal controlling document) and according to the methodology description for interference tests, SKB MD 330.003. However, no response matrix was prepared since only one major interference test was performed.

[1)] 1B: Pumping test-submersible pump, 2: Interference test.

[2)] Section not used during the interference test in HFM14.

[3)] Section tested during a shorter, second pumping.

The interpreted points of application, see explanation below, and lengths of the borehole sections involved in the interference test together with their estimated transmissivities from previous investigations (/1/–/29/) are presented in Table 3-4. The distances between the pumping borehole and the observation borehole sections are shown in Table 3-5. The distances between the hydraulic points of application in the boreholes were calculated.

The estimations of the points of application in the pumping borehole and in the different observation borehole sections respectively were made in one of two ways. If it was obvious that a certain flow anomaly, identified from e.g. flow logging, contributed to the major part of the transmissivity in one section, the position of that anomaly was chosen as the point of application. Alternatively, if no evident part of the section could be chosen with regard to transmissivity, either the midpoint of the section was selected or, if several parts of the section have comparable values of transmissivity, a point of balance calculation was made to estimate the point of application.

3.3 Equipment check

An equipment check was performed at the Geosigma engineering workshop in Uppsala as well as at the site as a simple and fast test to establish the operating status of sensors and other equipment. In addition, calibration constants were implemented and checked.

To check the function of the pressure sensors, the pressure in air was recorded and found to be as expected. Submerged in water, the pressure coincided well with the total head of water, while lowering.

4 Description of equipment

4.1 Overview

The temporary test system used for the interference test is described in Geosigma quality plan ("Kvalitetsplan för SKB uppdrag – Hydrauliskt interferenstest med hammarborrhål HFM14 som pumphål, K586087, Kristoffer Gokall-Norman, 2006-06-02", Geosigma and SKB internal controlling document). The equipment in the pumping borehole, HFM14, consisted primarily of the following parts:

- A dual 4" submersible pump with submarine contact and steel pipe to the ground surface.
- Plastic hose and pipe for transporting the pumped water into the sea.
- 1 pressure transducer in the borehole.
- Flow meter at the surface.
- Data logger to sample data from the flow meter and the pressure transducer.
- Flow rate control valve at the surface.
- PC to visualize the data.

All the observation sections included in the interference test are part of the SKB hydro monitoring system (HMS), where pressure is recorded continuously.

The estimated lower and upper practical measurement limits for the actual equipment used for the interference test, expressed in terms of specific flow (Q/s), are Q/s-L=$2 \cdot 10^{-6}$ $m^2/s$ and Q/s-U=$2 \cdot 10^{-2}$ $m^2/s$, respectively.

4.2 Measurement sensors

Technical data of the sensors used together with estimated data specifications of the test system for pumping tests are given in Table 4-1.

5 Execution

5.1 Preparations

A simple two point calibration of the pressure transducer that was used in the pumping borehole, was conducted just prior to start of pumping. The flow meter was calibrated in May, 2004 but a change of measurement interval made it necessary to do an adjustment of the calibration constants in situ. Manual measurements made in the field showed that the flow meter was accurate. Before the tests, function checks and cleaning of equipment were performed according to the Activity Plan.

5.2 Procedure

The interference test in HFM14 was carried out as a constant flow rate test followed by a subsequent pressure recovery period. The pressure interference was recorded in totally 105 sections in 36 observation boreholes, both cored and percussion drilled boreholes, all part of the HMS (Hydro Monitoring System). The flow rate in the pumping borehole was chosen based on the results from earlier pumping tests and flow logging in HFM14, /1/. It was not possible to perform a standard capacity test in the pumping borehole prior to the start of the test. Instead, the fine tuning of the flow rate had to be done during the initial time of the interference test. The flow rate was manually adjusted by a control valve and monitored by an electromagnetic flow meter. The data logger sampled data at a suitable frequency determined by the operator, see Table 5-1. Pumping in HFM14 was carried out using two coupled 4" submersible pumps during a period of c. 21 days. The subsequent pressure recovery was measured for c. 6 days.

The discharged water from the pumping borehole was led into the sea approximately 80 m east of HFM14.

In HFM14, the absolute pressure transducer connected to the data-logger was attached to the pump pipe approximately 23.5 m below top of casing. The transducers were connected directly to the data logger via cables. In the observation boreholes the hydro monitoring system was utilized for pressure registration.

Approximate sampling intervals for flow rate and pressure in the pumping borehole HFM14 are presented in Table 5-1. During the first hours of pumping the sampling frequency was adjusted manually and Table 5-1 reflects only the character of the changes of frequency intervals. After the stop of pumping the sampling frequency was automatically changed in accordance with Table 5-1.

Table 5-1. Approximate sampling intervals used for pressure registration in HFM14 during the interference test in HFM14.

| Time interval (s) from start/stop of pumping | Sampling interval (s) |
|---|---|
| 1–300 | 1 |
| 301–600 | 10 |
| 601–3,600 | 60 |
| > 3,600 | 300 |
| > 3,600 [1)] | 600 |

[1)] The 600 s sampling interval was used during recovery instead of the 300 s interval.

The observation boreholes are either fitted with removable miniTroll transducers equipped with an attached logger or with stationary equipment for measuring pressure in the different sections. The miniTroll transducers were logging a pressure value with the standard frequency of one reading every two hours. In addition, logging was done in case there was a pressure change of at least 0.1 m since the last logging. The stationary installations were set to automatically log once every 5 minutes and conditionally at a pressure change of 0.01 m.

A second shorter interference test was also performed in September of 2006. The reason for this was to be able to get information from the observation borehole KFM10A which was not fitted with any pressure transducers during the first test. The flow control valve was set in the same position as in the first test and a manual measurement of the flow rate just prior to the stop of pumping showed that the flow rate was comparable with that from the first interference test even though the flow meter was out of order for the entire second test.

5.3 Data handling

Flow and pressure data from the pumping borehole, HFM14, were downloaded from the logger (Campbell CR 5000) to a laptop running the program PC9000 and are, already in the logger, transformed to engineering units. All files are comma–separated (*.DAT) when copied to a computer. A list of the data files from the data logger is shown in Appendix 1.

5.4 Analyses and interpretation

When performed, both qualitative and quantitative analyses have been carried out in accordance with the methodology descriptions for interference tests, SKB MD 330.003, and are reported in Chapter 6 below. Methods for constant-flow rate tests in an equivalent porous medium were used by the analyses and interpretation of the tests.

The main objective of the interference test was to document how different fracture zones are connected hydraulically, to quantify their hydraulic properties and to clarify whether there are any major hydraulic boundaries in the area. Quantitative evaluation of five selected observation sections was also included in the commission. One section in each of the boreholes HFM13: 159–173 m, KFM06A: 341–362 m, KFM02A: 411–442 m, KFM02A: 490–518 m and KFM04A: 169–1,001 m was chosen for analyses with regard to transmissivity and storativity. Other borehole sections included in the interference tests were only qualitatively analysed, mainly by means of the response analysis reported in section 6 below.

Data from all available observation sections were used in the primary qualitative analyses. The qualitative analysis of the responses in interference test in HFM14 was primarily based on time versus pressure diagrams together with response diagrams. Linear diagrams of pressure versus time for all test sections are presented in Chapter 6 for each borehole included in the test.

For the five selected observation sections the dominating flow regimes (pseudo-linear, pseudo-radial and pseudo-spherical flow, respectively) and possible outer boundary conditions were identified. In particular, pseudo-radial flow is reflected by a constant (horizontal) derivative in the diagrams, whereas no-flow- and constant head boundaries are characterized by rapid increase and decrease of the derivative, respectively.

Different values were applied on the filter coefficient (step length) by the calculation of the pressure derivative to investigate the effect of this coefficient on the derivative. It is desired to achieve maximum smoothing of the derivative without altering the original shape of the data.

Quantitative evaluation was only undertaken of the responses in the five above mentioned selected observation sections, HFM13: 159–173 m, KFM06A: 341–362 m, KFM02A: 411–442 m, KFM02A: 490–518 m and KFM04A: 169–1,001 m. The sections were selected based on the results of the preliminary qualitative analyses (response analysis) and for comparison with results produced by tracer dilution tests. In addition, the response in the pumping borehole HFM14 was evaluated as a single-hole pumping test according to the methods described in /30/.

The quantitative transient analysis was performed by a special version of the test analysis software AQTESOLV that enables both visual and automatic type curve matching. The transient evaluation was carried out as an iterative process of type curve matching and automatic non-linear regression. The quantitative, transient interpretation of the hydraulic parameters (transmissivity and storativity) is normally based on the identified pseudo-radial flow regime during the tests in log-log and lin-log data diagrams.

For the single-hole pumping test in HFM14 the storativity was calculated using an empirical regression relationship between storativity and transmissivity, see Equation (5-1), Rhén et al. (1997) /31/. Firstly, the transmissivity and skin factor were obtained by type curve matching on the data curve using a fixed storativity value of $10^{-6}$ according to the instruction SKB MD 320.004. From the transmissivity value obtained, the storativity was then calculated according to Equation (5-1) and the type curve matching was repeated. In most cases the change of storativity does not significantly alter the calculated transmissivity by the new type curve matching. Instead, the estimated skin factor, which is strongly correlated to the storativity using the effective borehole radius concept, is altered correspondingly.

S = storativity (–)

T = transmissivity ($m^2/s$)

5.5 Nonconformities

- Due to the fact that no capacity test could be performed in HFM14 prior to pumping start, the adjustments to reach the intended constant flow rate took longer time than predicted.
- Six of the observation boreholes originally intended to be included in the interference test (KFM01D, KFM07A, KFM09B, KFM08A, HFM25 and KFM09A) did for various reasons not provide any pressure data and were therefore excluded from the interference test.
- In some of the observation sections, data from the pressure loggers are transmitted via radio link. In four of the boreholes fitted with such devices (HFM11, HFM12, HFM32 and HFM20) the communication was not working properly and a lot of data were therefore lost. This made analysis of these sections difficult or not possible.
- The flow meter broke down almost 6 days before stop of pumping. The flow between this time and the stop of pumping was estimated by linear regression.
- An extra pumping in HFM14 was conducted between the 8th and 11th of September to introduce a pressure interference in borehole KFM10A which was not ready for pressure measurement during the main interference test.
- Some wells, monitoring the quaternary deposits, were also included in the report that were not intended to be included from the beginning.

6.1 Nomenclature and symbols

The nomenclature and symbols used for the results of the single-hole and interference test are according to the Instruction for analysis of single-hole injection- and pumping tests (SKB MD 320.004) and the methodology description for interference tests (SKB MD 330.003), respectively (both are SKB internal controlling documents). Additional symbols used are explained in the text.

6.2 Interference test 1 in HFM14

The start and stop of pumping occurred on July, 4 and July 25, respectively. The test stop is regarded at July 31st. After this time, some minor intermittent pumping activities were performed within the area which affected the recovery in some of the boreholes. The overall data acquisition was continued until August, 8.

During the interference test the pressure was registered in a number of cored boreholes and percussion boreholes in rock. In addition, the pressure was registered in six wells monitoring the quaternary deposits. The pressure responses in all monitored observation sections in the rock are presented in Figures 6-3 through 6-37 whereas the responses in the quaternary deposit boreholes are presented in Figure A4-1. All observation boreholes in the rock included in the test and their approximate distances to the pumping borehole HFM14 are marked in Figure 1-1. The location of the boreholes monitoring the quaternary deposit are shown in Figure A4-2. Six of the observation boreholes originally intended to be included in the interference test have for various reasons not provided any pressure data and are therefore excluded from the interference test. These sections, KFM01D, KFM07A, KFM09B, KFM08A, HFM25 and KFM09A, are still included in tables in this report even though pressure data are not presented for these sections.

Visual inspection of the pressure responses in the observation sections, presented in Figures 6-3 through 6-37, indicates that significant responses were registered in c. 65% of the 105 observation sections included in the interference test. 28 sections were completely unaffected during the time of the interference test. The measured drawdowns ($s_p$) at the end of the flow period and the estimated response time lags ($dt_L$) in all of the observation sections are shown in Tables 6-114 and 6-115, respectively. The response time is defined as the time lag after start of pumping until a drawdown response of 0.01 m was observed in the actual observation section.

All pressure data presented in this report have been corrected for atmospheric pressure changes by subtracting the latter pressure from the measured (absolute) pressure. This is also true for the data received from the HMS. It should be observed that no further corrections of the measured drawdown have been made, e.g. due to natural trends, precipitation, tidal effects etc, as discussed below. All times presented are Swedish summer times, i.e. adjustment for daylight saving time has been made for any reported times.

During the interference test, approximately 10 mm of total precipitation (c. 4 mm during the flow period) was reported at two stations in the vicinity of the boreholes included in the test, see Figure A2-10. In the figure the start and stop times of the interference test and flow period are marked. Most of the rain fell on two occasions but no evidence that the precipitation has significantly influenced the pressure in the observation boreholes has been noted. There is however a possibility that the recovery has been affected to some extent due to the precipitation even though it is not apparent. In the figure also the air pressure together with the sea-water level from one station in the vicinity of the investigation area during the interference test period are included.

There are strong indications of a natural trend of decreasing groundwater pressure during the entire hydraulic interference test period. At the end of the recovery period, the pressure in many observation sections had not returned to the levels that prevailed prior to the start of pumping and the decreasing natural trend continued. This effect can be observed in, for instance, Figure 6-6. The effect may not be as strong as is indicated by Figure 6-6 since the pressure might have continued to rise, had the recovery time been long enough. The length of the recovery period, however, was controlled by other activities in the area that disturbed the pressure in the observation sections, cf. Figure 6-6.

No correction for the natural decreasing pressure trend has been done in the preliminary qualitative response analysis described in the main report. Corrected head and drawdown data for the natural trend together with the correction procedure are presented in Appendix 5. The natural trend is different in each observation section. The strength of some of the responses described in the response analysis below is thus overestimated due to the natural decreasing trend. However, in the quantitative transient analysis of the responses in the five selected observation sections corrections for the natural trend were made, see Section 6.5.

The pressure in several of the observation sections included in the interference test was displaying an oscillating behaviour. This is believed to be naturally caused by so called tidal fluctuations or earth tides in combination with changes of the sea water level. These phenomena have, to some extent, been investigated previously in /32/. This effect can be observed, for instance, in many sections in borehole KFM06A, Figure 6-17a and 6-17b. This effect will not be further commented on in every section in which it appears. Only on some occasions where it is unusually strong or if it affects the analysis will it be commented on.

In the transient evaluation of the responses in the pumping borehole and selected observation sections, the models described in /33/ and /34/ respectively were used. Due to the variable flow rate during the first c. 2 hours of pumping and then again about two days into the flow period, the tests were analysed as variable flow rate tests by the transient evaluation.

6.2.1 Pumping borehole HFM14: 0–150 m

General test data for the pumping test in HFM14 are presented in Table 6-1. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 6.0 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 6–150 m.

Comments on the test

The test was performed as a constant-flow rate pumping test. The mean flow rate was c. 341 L/min and the duration of the flow period was c. 21 days. An approximately constant flow rate was reached after c. 2 hours. About 39 hours into the flow period the pressure suddenly drops (cf. Figure 6-1), probably due to formation properties although no real explanation has been found. Small changes in pressure or flow rate can be identified also later in the flow period, nothing to the same extent however, and the dominating appearance is a slowly decreasing trend that lasts for the entire flow period. The adjustment to reach a suitable flow rate was made complicated by the fact that no capacity test in the borehole was possible prior to the test. About 15.5 days into the pumping period the flow meter breaks down. The flow rate from this moment until the end of the pumping has been estimated by linear extrapolation. The final drawdown in HFM14 was approximately 12 m. The pressure recovery was measured for almost 6 days. Overviews of the flow rate and pressure responses in HFM14 are presented in Figures 6-1 and 6-2. The pressure responses in log-log and lin-log diagrams during the flow period are presented in Figures A2-1 and A2-2 in Appendix 2. In Figures A2-3 and A2-4, log-log and lin-log diagrams of the recovery period are shown.

Interpreted flow regimes

During the flow period, WBS is indicated during the first c. 60 seconds, although the data are quite scattered. Between approximately 100 and 1,000 s, a short period of pseudo-radial flow is believed to be present. From c. $10^5$ s and throughout the flow period a pseudo-spherical flow regime is dominating.

During the recovery period, a possible period of PRF between c. 2,000 and 20,000 s is present. A transition period, probably into a PSF, is following the period of pseudo-radial flow and lasts until the end of the pumping phase.

Interpreted parameters

Transient, quantitative interpretation of the flow period is shown in log-log and lin-log diagrams in Figures A2-1 and A2-2 and of the recovery period in Figures A2-3 and A2-4, all in Appendix 2. The results from the transient evaluation of the single-hole pumping test in HFM14 are summarized in Table 6-119 and in the Test Summary Sheet.

6.2.2 Observation section HFM15: 0–84 m

In Figure 6-3 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM15 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM15, 0–84 m, are presented in Table 6-2. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 6.0 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 6–84 m.

Comments on the test

A very quick response to pumping is indicated in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 8.4 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 2 seconds after start of pumping in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 7.8 m during the recovery period lasting for approximately 6 days. The sudden drop of pressure that was observed in the pumping borehole can also be clearly seen in this section.

6.2.3 Observation section HFM15: 85–95 m

In Figure 6-3 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM15 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM15, 85–95 m, are presented in Table 6-3.

Comments on the test

A very quick response to pumping is indicated in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 7.8 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 5 seconds after start of pumping in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 7.3 m during the recovery period lasting for approximately 6 days. The sudden drop of pressure that was observed in the pumping borehole is also clearly visible in this section.

6.2.4 Observation section KFM05A: 0–114 m

In Figure 6-4 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM05A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM05A, 0–114 m, are presented in Table 6-4. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 100.07 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 100–114 m.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 5.5 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 60 seconds after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 5.1 m during the recovery period lasting for approximately 6 days.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was detected also in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 5.4 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 6 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 4.9 m during the recovery period lasting for approximately 6 days.

6.2.6 Observation section KFM05A: 254–272 m

Comments on the test

No effects of pumping can be seen in this section. The pressure is decreasing during the first few days but the rate of decrease is similar to the rate before start of pumping. A jump to a new pressure level is also indicated which is believed to be equipment related. It is unlikely that this section is influenced by pumping in HFM14.

6.2.7 Observation section KFM05A: 273–489 m

In Figure 6-4 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM05A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM05A, 273–489 m, are presented in Table 6-7.

Comments on the test

No effects of pumping can be seen in this section. It is unlikely that this section is influenced by pumping in HFM14. The pressure in the test section is showing a slight oscillating behaviour. This is believed to be natural fluctuations, mainly caused by so called tidal effects which, in part, have been studied previously in /32/.

6.2.8 Observation section KFM05A: 490–698 m

In Figure 6-4 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM05A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM05A, 490–698 m, are presented in Table 6-8.

Comments on the test

No effects of pumping can be seen in this section. It is improbable that this section is influenced by pumping in HFM14.

6.2.9 Observation section KFM05A: 699–1,002 m

In Figure 6-4 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM05A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM05A, 699–1,002 m, are presented in Table 6-9.

Comments on the test

No effects of pumping can be seen in this section. It is improbable that this section is at all influenced by pumping in HFM14.

6.2.10 Observation section HFM19: 0–103 m

In Figure 6-5 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM19 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM19, 0–103 m, are presented in Table 6-10. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 12.04 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 12–103 m.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 6.2 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 7 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 5.8 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days. The sudden pressure decrease that was observed in the pumping borehole, HFM14, can be clearly seen also in this section.

In Figure 6-5 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM19 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM19, 104–167 m, are presented in Table 6-11.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 6.3 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 3 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 5.9 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days. The sudden pressure decrease that was observed in the pumping borehole, HFM14, can be clearly seen also in this section.

In Figure 6-5 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM19 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM19, 168–182 m, are presented in Table 6-12.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 6.3 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 2 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14, which is the fastest responding section in HFM19. There was a total recovery of c. 5.8 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days. The sudden pressure decrease that was observed in the pumping borehole, HFM14, can be clearly seen also in this section.

6.2.13 Observation section HFM13: 0–100 m

In Figure 6-6 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM13 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM13, 0–100 m, are presented in Table 6-13. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 14.9 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 15–100 m.

Comments on the test

This section indicates a clear response to pumping in HFM14. A total drawdown during the flow period of c. 6.1 m was registered and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 5 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 5.6 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days. The sudden pressure decrease that was observed in the pumping borehole, HFM14, is slightly indicated also in this section.

6.2.14 Observation section HFM13: 101–158 m

In Figure 6-6 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM13 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM13, 101–158 m, are presented in Table 6-14.

Comments on the test

This section also indicates a clear response to pumping in HFM14. A total drawdown during the flow period of c. 4.8 m was registered and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 39 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 4.4 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.15 Observation section HFM13: 159–173 m

In Figure 6-6 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM13 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM13, 159–173 m, are presented in Table 6-15.

Comments on the test

This section also indicates a clear response to pumping in HFM14. A total drawdown during the flow period of c. 2.7 m was registered and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 3 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 1.5 m during the recovery period of approximately 6 days.

6.2.16 Observation section KFM01C: 0–58 m

In Figure 6-7 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM01C is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM01C, 0–58 m, are presented in Table 6-16. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 11.96 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 12–58 m.

Comments on the test

The pumping in HFM14 caused a clear response in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 2.8 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 13 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 2.5 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.17 Observation section KFM01C: 59–237 m

In Figure 6-7 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM01C is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM01C, 59–237 m, are presented in Table 6-17.

Comments on the test

The pumping in HFM14 caused a clear response in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 3.0 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 10 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 2.6 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.18 Observation section KFM01C: 238–450 m

In Figure 6-7 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM01C is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM01C, 238–450 m, are presented in Table 6-18.

Comments on the test

This section appears to be unaffected by the pumping in HFM14. The pressure is increasing throughout the entire test period except for a small decrease during the initial recovery period.

6.2.19 Observation section HFM01: 0–200 m

In Figure 6-8 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM01 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM01, 0–200 m, are presented in Table 6-19. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 31.93 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 32–200 m.

Comments on the test

The pressure response to pumping in HFM14 is clearly observed in this observation section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 2.6 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 18 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 2.2 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.20 Observation section KFM01A: 0–108 m

Comments on the test

This section appears to be affected by the pumping in HFM14. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 0.44 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 45 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 0.1 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.21 Observation section KFM01A: 109–130 m

In Figure 6-9 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM01A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM01A, 109–130 m, are presented in Table 6-21.

Comments on the test

The pressure response to pumping in HFM14 can be clearly observed in this observation section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 1.4 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 35 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 1.5 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.22 Observation section KFM01A: 131–204 m

Comments on the test

The pressure response to pumping in HFM14 can be clearly observed also in this observation section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 1.8 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 103 minutes after the pumping started. There was a total recovery of c. 1.3 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.23 Observation section KFM01A: 205–373 m

In Figure 6-9 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM01A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM01A, 205–373 m, are presented in Table 6-23.

Comments on the test

This section appears to be virtually unaffected by the pumping in HFM14. The oscillating behaviour, discussed previously, makes it hard to isolate any possible influence from the pumping.

6.2.24 Observation section KFM01A: 374–430 m

In Figure 6-9 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM01A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM01A, 374–430 m, are presented in Table 6-24.

Comments on the test

This section appears to be virtually unaffected by the pumping in HFM14. The oscillating behaviour, discussed previously, makes it hard to isolate any possible influence from the pumping.

6.2.25 Observation section KFM01A: 431–1,002 m

Comments on the test

This section appears to be completely unaffected by the pumping in HFM14. The pressure in the test section is increasing during the entire test.

6.2.26 Observation section KFM01D: 0-800 m

There are no test data available from the observation section KFM01D, 0–800 m.

Comments on the test

No pressure data have been retrieved from this observation section and it is therefore excluded from the interference test even though it was originally intended to be part of the test.

6.2.27 Observation section KFM01B: 0–100 m

In Figure 6-10 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM01B is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM01B, 0–100 m, are presented in Table 6-27. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 9.09 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 9–100 m.

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 1.6 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 200 seconds after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 1.4 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.29 Observation section KFM01B: 142–500 m

In Figure 6-10 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM01B is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM01B, 142–500 m, are presented in Table 6-29.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 1.9 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 83 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 1.5 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.30 Observation section HFM32: 0–25 m

In Figure 6-11 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM32 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM32, 0–25 m, are presented in Table 6-30. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 6.03 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 6–25 m.

Comments on the test

A weak but rather distinct effect from the pumping in HFM14 can be seen in this section. The pressure data are not very stable though, and for long periods of time data are missing entirely. This is due to poor transmission via the radio link that is used to transfer data from the site to the HMS-data base. During the first days of drawdown a few measurements have been recorded but later on and especially during the recovery nothing can be said about the characteristics of the pressure curve. Still, an approximation of total drawdown can be made from values reported 2006-07-18. The total drawdown was at that point c. 0.2 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 136 minutes into the flow period. It should be emphasised that the scattered pressure data make it very hard to define the time to reach a 0.01 m drawdown.

6.2.31 Observation section HFM32: 26–31 m

In Figure 6-11 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM32 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM32, 26–31 m, are presented in Table 6-31.

In Figure 6-11 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM32 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM32, 32–97 m, are presented in Table 6-32.

Comments on the test

An undisputable effect from the pumping in HFM14 can be seen in this section. The pressure data are not very stable though and for long periods of time data are missing entirely. This is due to poor transmission via the radio link that is used to transfer data from the site to the HMS-data base. It should be emphasised that the scattered pressure data render it very hard to define the time to reach a 0.01 m drawdown.

Comments on the test

An undisputable effect from the pumping in HFM14 can be seen in this section. The pressure data are not very stable though and for long periods of time data are missing entirely. This is due to poor transmission via the radio link that is used to transfer data from the site to the HMS-data base. During the first days of drawdown a few measurements have been recorded but later on and especially during the recovery nothing can be said about the characteristic of the pressure curve. Still, an approximation of total drawdown can be made from values reported 2006-07-18. The total drawdown was at that point c. 2.1 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 1 hour into the flow period. It should be emphasised that the scattered pressure data makes it very hard to define the time to reach a 0.01 m drawdown.

6.2.34 Observation section HFM03: 0–18 m

In Figure 6-12 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM03 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM03, 0–18 m, are presented in Table 6-34. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 13.1 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 13–18 m.

Comments on the test

The pressure response to pumping in HFM14 is clearly observed in this observation section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 2.7 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 53 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 2.2 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.35 Observation section HFM03: 19–26 m

In Figure 6-12 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM03 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM03, 19–26 m, are presented in Table 6-35.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 2.8 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 23 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 2.4 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.36 Observation section HFM02: 0–37 m

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 2.8 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 13 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 2.4 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

In Figure 6-13 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM02 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM02, 38–48 m, are presented in Table 6-37.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 2.8 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 13 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 2.4 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.38 Observation section HFM02: 49–100 m

In Figure 6-13 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM02 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM02, 49–100 m, are presented in Table 6-38.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 2.8 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 16 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 2.4 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.39 Observation section HFM27: 0–24 m

In Figure 6-14 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM27 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM27, 0–24 m, are presented in Table 6-39. It should be noted that the pressure values given in Table 6-39 are only valid for relative pressure variations. The transducers had been installed only a short time prior to the interference test and calibration to render absolute values, in metres above sea level, had not yet been performed. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 12.03 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 12–24 m.

Comments on the test

This section shows a clear response to pumping in HFM14. A total drawdown during the flow period of c. 2.7 m was registered and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 23 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 2.3 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.40 Observation section HFM27: 25–45 m

In Figure 6-14 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM27 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM27, 25–45 m, are presented in Table 6-40. It should be noted that the pressure values given in Table 6-40 are only valid for relative pressure variations. The transducers had been installed only a short time prior to the interference test and calibration to render absolute values, in metres above sea level, had not yet been performed.

Comments on the test

This section is also demonstrating a clear response to pumping in HFM14. A total drawdown during the flow period of c. 2.8 m was registered and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 12 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 2.4 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.41 Observation section HFM27: 46–58 m

In Figure 6-14 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM27 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM27, 46–58 m, are presented in Table 6-41. It should be noted that the pressure values given in Table 6-41 are only valid for relative pressure variations. The transducers had been installed only a short time prior to the interference test and calibration to render absolute values, in metres above sea level, had not yet been performed.

Comments on the test

Also this section is displaying a clear response to pumping in HFM14. A total drawdown during the flow period of c. 2.7 m was registered and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 17 minutes after the pumping started. There was a total recovery of c. 2.3 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.42 Observation section HFM27: 59–128 m

In Figure 6-14 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM27 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM27, 59–128 m, are presented in Table 6-42. It should be noted that the pressure values given in Table 6-42 are only valid for relative pressure variations. The transducers had been installed only a short time prior to the interference test and calibration to render absolute values, in metres above sea level, had not yet been performed.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was found in this section. A total drawdown during the pumping period of c. 2.6 m was registered. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 33 minutes after the pumping started. There was a total recovery of about 2.2 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.43 Observation section HFM24: 0–151 m

In Figure 6-15 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM24 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM24, 0–151 m, are presented in Table 6-43. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 18.03 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 18–151 m.

Comments on the test

This section was clearly affected by pumping in HFM14. A total drawdown of c. 1.5 m was registered during the flow period and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 17 minutes after the pumping started. There was a total recovery of c. 0.9 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.44 Observation section KFM04A: 0–168 m

In Figure 6-16 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM04A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM04A, 0–168 m, are presented in Table 6-44. It should be noted that the pressure values given in Table 6-44 are only valid for relative pressure variations. The transducers had been installed only a short time prior to the interference test and calibration to render absolute values, in metres above sea level, had not yet been performed. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 106.95 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 107–168 m.

Comments on the test

A clear effect from pumping was observed in this observation section. The total drawdown at the end of the flow period was c. 0.7 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 650 minutes after the pumping started. There was a total recovery of c. 0.1 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

In Figure 6-16 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM04A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM04A, 169–1,001 m, are presented in Table 6-45. It should be noted that the pressure values given in Table 6-45 are only valid for relative pressure variations. The transducers had been installed only a short time prior to the interference test and calibration to render absolute values, in metres above sea level, had not yet been performed.

Comments on the test

A clear effect from pumping was observed in this observation section. The total drawdown at the end of the flow period was c. 0.7 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 530 minutes after the pumping started. There was a total recovery of c. 0.2 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.46 Observation section KFM06A: 0–150 m

In Figure 6-17a an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06A, 0–150 m, are presented in Table 6-46. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 100.40 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 100–150 m.

Comments on the test

It seems apparent that this section is influenced by pumping in HFM14. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 0.7 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 11 hours after the pumping started. The total recovery during the recovery period of about 6 days was measured at c. 0.5 m.

In Figure 6-17a an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06A, 151–246 m, are presented in Table 6-47.

Comments on the test

A clear effect from pumping was observed in this observation section. The total drawdown at the end of the flow period was c. 0.8 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 8 hours after the pumping started. There was a total recovery of c. 0.6 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

In Figure 6-17a an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06A, 247–340 m, are presented in Table 6-48.

Comments on the test

A clear effect from pumping was observed in this observation section. The total drawdown at the end of the flow period was c. 1.0 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 7 hours after the pumping started. There was a total recovery of c. 0.7 m during the recovery period of approximately 6 days.

6.2.49 Observation section KFM06A: 341–362 m

In Figure 6-17a an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06A, 341–362 m, are presented in Table 6-49.

Comments on the test

This section clearly responds to pumping in HFM14. The total drawdown at the end of the flow period was c. 0.6 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 18 hours into the flow period. There was a total recovery of c. 0.3 m during the recovery period of approximately 6 days.

In Figure 6-17a an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06A, 363–737 m, are presented in Table 6-50.

Comments on the test

This section clearly responds to pumping in HFM14. The total drawdown at the end of the flow period was c. 0.6 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 20 hours into the flow period. There was a total recovery of c. 0.3 m during the recovery period of approximately 6 days.

6.2.51 Observation section KFM06A: 738–748 m

In Figure 6-17a an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06A is shown. In addition, this section is included in Figure 6-17b where a high resolution diagram is presented for clarity. General test data from the observation section KFM06A, 738–748 m, are presented in Table 6-51.

Comments on the test

This observation section is probably slightly affected by the pumping in HFM14. There are weak indications of a slight recovery and, as indicated by Table 6-51, there is also a tendency of a slight drawdown. It is however very hard to distinguish a real drawdown from a virtual drawdown since the tidal effects have such a large impact on the pressure data from this section. The suspicion of a slight response is, however, supported by the results from a tracer dilution test, /35/, which was performed in this section in conjunction with the hydraulic interference test described in this report. In Figure 6-17b the weak response is more clearly revealed.

6.2.52 Observation section KFM06A: 749–826 m

In Figure 6-17a an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06A is shown. In addition, this section is included in Figure 6-17b where a high resolution diagram is displayed for clarity. General test data from the observation section KFM06A, 749–826 m, are presented in Table 6-52.

Comments on the test

This observation section is probably to some extent affected by the pumping in HFM14. The pressure appearance is very similar to that of section KFM06A:738–748 m. There are weak indications of a slight recovery and, as indicated by Table 6-52, there is a tendency of a slight drawdown as well. It is however very hard to distinguish a real drawdown from a virtual drawdown since the tidal effects have such a large impact on the pressure data from this section. In Figure 6-17b the weak response is more clearly revealed.

6.2.53 Observation section KFM06A: 827–1,001 m

In Figure 6-17a an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06A, 827–1,001 m, are presented in Table 6-53.

Comments on the test

This section appears to be completely unaffected by the pumping in HFM14. The pressure in this observation section is rising throughout the entire test.

6.2.54 Observation section KFM06C: 0–186 m

In Figure 6-18 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06C is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06C, 0–186 m, are presented in Table 6-54. Since no representative initial hydraulic head could be determined in this borehole, see below, the measured recovery of the head at test stop was calculated and presented in the tables below for KFM06C. The head recovery was used as an approximate measure of the responses in this borehole. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 100.12 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 100–186 m.

Comments on the test

A clear response is visible in this observation section. Due to a lack of, or very scattered, pressure data from the earlier parts of the drawdown period, it is not possible to calculate a total drawdown or the time to reach a 0.01 m drawdown. It is still evident, especially from the recovery period, that the section is influenced by the pumping in HFM14. A head recovery of c. 0.5 m was registered during the recovery period of approximately 6 days.

A head recovery of c. 0.4 m was registered during the recovery period of approximately 6 days.

6.2.57 Observation section KFM06C: 351–401 m

In Figure 6-18 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06C is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06C, 351–401 m, are presented in Table 6-57. ### 6.2.60 Observation section KFM06C: 541–646 m

In Figure 6-18 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06C is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06C, 541–646 m, are presented in Table 6-60. Since no representative initial hydraulic head could be determined in this borehole, see below, the measured recovery of the head at test stop was calculated and presented in the tables below. The head recovery was used as an approximate measure of the responses in this borehole.

Comments on the test

This section is probably not affected by the pumping in HFM14. Due to a lack of, or very scattered, pressure data from the earlier parts of the drawdown period, it is not possible to calculate a total drawdown or the time to reach a 0.01 m drawdown. An apparent head recovery of c. 0.1 m was registered during the recovery period of approximately 6 days. The head increase during the recovery period is assumed to be due to precipitation during this period, cf. Figure A2-10 in Appendix 2. This borehole section, as well as most sections in KFM06C, is strongly influenced by tidal effects which makes the interpretation of responses in the lower part of the borehole uncertain.

6.2.61 Observation section KFM06C: 647–666 m

In Figure 6-18 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06C is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06C, 647–666 m, are presented in Table 6-61. Since no representative initial hydraulic head could be determined in this borehole, see below, the measured recovery of the head at test stop was calculated and presented in the tables below. The head recovery was used as an approximate measure of the responses in this borehole.

Comments on the test

This section is probably not affected by the pumping in HFM14. Although there is a head recovery of c. 0.2 m during the recovery period lasting for approximately 6 days, the pressure was continuously rising throughout the entire flow period. The head increase during the recovery period is assumed to be due to precipitation during this period, cf. Figure A2-10 in Appendix 2. This borehole section, as well as all sections in KFM06C, is missing data from the earliest part of the drawdown period which makes the interpretation of responses even more difficult.

6.2.62 Observation section KFM06C: 667–872 m

In Figure 6-18 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06C is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06C, 667–872 m, are presented in Table 6-62. Since no representative initial hydraulic head could be determined in this borehole, see below, the measured recovery of the head at test stop was calculated and presented in the tables below. The head recovery was used as an approximate measure of the responses in this borehole.

Comments on the test

This section is probably not affected by the pumping in HFM14. Although there is a head recovery of c. 0.05 m during the recovery period lasting for approximately 6 days, the pressure was continuously rising throughout the entire flow period. The head increase during the recovery period is assumed to be due to precipitation during this period, cf. Figure A2-10 in Appendix 2. This borehole section, as well as all sections in KFM06C, is missing data from the earliest part of the drawdown period which makes the interpretation of responses even more difficult. Furthermore, the section is strongly affected by tidal effects which make the interpretation of responses in the lower part of the borehole uncertain.

6.2.63 Observation section KFM06C: 873–1,001 m

In Figure 6-18 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06C is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06C, 873–1,001 m, are presented in Table 6-63. Since no representative initial hydraulic head could be determined in this borehole, see below, the measured recovery of the head at test stop was calculated and presented in the tables below. The head recovery was used as an approximate measure of the responses in this borehole.

Comments on the test

There are no indications of this section being influenced by the pumping in HFM14. Only tidal effects are clearly present.

Comments on the test

A clear effect from pumping was observed in this observation section. The total drawdown at the end of the flow period was c. 1.4 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 3 hours after the pumping started. There was a total recovery of c. 1.0 m during the recovery period of approximately 6 days.

6.2.65 Observation section KFM06B: 27–50 m

In Figure 6-19 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06B is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06B, 27–50 m, are presented in Table 6-65.

Comments on the test

A clear effect from pumping was observed in this observation section. The total drawdown at the end of the flow period was c. 1.6 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 99 minutes after the pumping started. There was a total recovery of c. 1.2 m during the recovery period of approximately 6 days.

6.2.66 Observation section KFM06B: 51–100 m

In Figure 6-19 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM06B is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM06B, 51–100 m, are presented in Table 6-66.

Comments on the test

A clear effect from pumping was observed in this observation section. The total drawdown at the end of the flow period was c. 1.5 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 93 minutes after the pumping started. There was a total recovery of c. 1.2 m during the recovery period of approximately 6 days.

6.2.67 Observation section HFM10: 0–99 m

In Figure 6-20 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM10 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM10, 0–99 m, are presented in Table 6-67. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 11.8 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 12–99 m.

Comments on the test

This section is possibly responding to the pumping in HFM14. Prior to the start of pumping there was a clear decreasing trend in the recorded hydraulic head in this observation section. It seems however, that the slope of the pressure curve is changing slightly at the time of pump start, cf. Figure 6-20. At the start of recovery the pressure curve is again changing its slope slightly, although no real recovery is detected. The response is likely to be weaker than is indicated by the total drawdown of approximately 0.7 m shown in Table 6-67.

Table 6-67. General test data from the observation section HFM10: 0–99 m during the interference test in HFM14.

| Pressure data | Nomenclature | Unit | Value |
|---|---|---|---|

6.2.68 Observation section HFM10: 100–150 m

Comments on the test

A probable pressure response to pumping in HFM14 is indicated in this section. The response is very similar to that of section HFM10: 0–99 m, but the decreasing pressure trend prior to the start of pumping is not as strong and the recovery is more evident, proposing a more clear effect from pumping. A total recovery of c. 0.1 m was measured during the recovery period of approximately 6 days.

6.2.69 Observation section HFM16: 0–53 m

In Figure 6-21 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM16 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM16, 0–53 m, are presented in Table 6-69. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 12.02 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 12–53 m.

Comments on the test

The pumping in HFM14 caused a clear response in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 1.6 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 133 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 1.2 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

In Figure 6-21 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM16 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM16, 54–67 m, are presented in Table 6-70.

Comments on the test

The pumping in HFM14 caused a clear response in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 1.5 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 133 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 1.1 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

In Figure 6-21 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM16 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM16, 68–132 m, are presented in Table 6-71.

Comments on the test

The pumping in HFM14 caused a clear response in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 1.5 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 113 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 1.2 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.72 Observation section HFM09: 0–50 m

In Figure 6-22 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM09 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM09, 0–50 m, are presented in Table 6-72. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 17.02 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 17–50 m.

Comments on the test

This section is responding to the pumping in HFM14. The total drawdown during the flow period was measured at c. 0.7 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 9 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 0.1 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.73 Observation section KFM07B: 0–299 m

In Figure 6-23 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM07B is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM07B, 0–299 m, are presented in Table 6-73. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 65.29 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 65–299 m.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this observation section. A total drawdown of c. 1.6 m was measured during the flow period. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 133 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 1.2 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.74 Observation section HFM21: 0–202 m

In Figure 6-23 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM21 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM21, 0–202 m, are presented in Table 6-74. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 12.03 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 12–202 m.

Comments on the test

The data from this section are slightly corrupted and show sudden drops of pressure on several occasions. It seems however, when looking past the deviant data, that the section is visibly affected by the pumping in HFM14. A total drawdown of c. 1.5 m was registered during the flow period and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 27 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 1.2 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 12.03 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 12–222 m.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this observation section. A total drawdown of c. 1.4 m was measured during the flow period. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 193 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 1.1 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.78 Observation section HFM20: 0–48 m

In Figure 6-26 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM20 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM20, 0–48 m, are presented in Table 6-78. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 12.03 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 12–48 m.

Comments on the test

It is very likely that an effect from the pumping in HFM14 can be seen in this section. The pressure data are not at all stable though and for long periods of time data are missing entirely. This is due to poor transmission via the radio link that is used to transfer data from the site to the HMS-data base. During the first days of drawdown a few measurements have been recorded but later on, and especially during the recovery, nothing can be said about the characteristics of the pressure curve. Still, an approximation of total drawdown can be made from values reported 2006-07-16 18:23. The total drawdown was at that point c. 0.7 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 17 hours into the flow period.

Comments on the test

This section is likely to be influenced by the pumping in HFM14. The response is not very strong but changes in the pressure are evident in connection to start and stop of pumping. A total drawdown of c. 0.4 m was registered during the flow period and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 9.5 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 0.3 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.84 Observation section KFM08B: 71–112 m

In Figure 6-27 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM08B is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM08B, 71–112 m, are presented in Table 6-84.

Comments on the test

No response to pumping is detected in this section. It is unlikely that this section is influenced by pumping in HFM14. The pressure in the test section is displaying a very erratic behaviour which does not seem to be connected to the pumping in HFM14.

6.2.85 Observation section KFM08B: 113–200 m

In Figure 6-27 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM08B is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM08B, 113–200 m, are presented in Table 6-85.

Comments on the test

No clear response to pumping is detected in this section. It is unlikely that this section is influenced by pumping in HFM14. Although the pressure is decreasing during the flow period, there is a trend of decreasing pressure prior to the start of pumping which makes it hard to distinguish the possible effects of pumping from a trend of some other origin. There is however a slight change in the slope of the pressure curve at the start of the recovery period which may indicate a slight influence from the pumping borehole.

Comments on the test

This section is clearly influenced by the pumping in HFM14. A total drawdown of c. 0.6 m was registered during the flow period and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 23 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 0.02 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

Pressure data from this section were only available on a late stage. The data may therefore not be included in all tables and figures.

6.2.89 Observation section HFM23: 0–212 m

In Figure 6-29 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM23 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM28, 0–212 m, are presented in Table 6-89. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 20.80 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 21–212 m.

Comments on the test

There are indications that this section is responding to the pumping in HFM14. The pressure in the section is decreasing prior to the start of pumping, but the rate of change is visibly changing at the start of pumping, and later also after stop of pumping which is interpreted as an effect from the pumping. A total drawdown of c. 0.5 m was registered during the flow period and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 19 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. The total measured recovery during the c. 6 days recovery period was actually negative. The recovery may be masked by the continued naturally decreasing pressure trend.

6.2.90 Observation section HFM29: 0–200 m

In Figure 6-30 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM29 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM29, 0–200 m, are presented in Table 6-90. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 9.03 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 9–200 m.

Comments on the test

Weak indications of a response to pumping were detected in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 0.6 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 31 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. There was no actual pressure recovery during the recovery period lasting for approximately 6 days. Only the fact that the pressure is flatting out in conjunction with the stop of pumping provides an indication of the presence of a hydraulic connection with the pumping borehole. The recovery may be masked by the continued naturally decreasing pressure trend.

In Figure 6-31 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM17 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM17, 0–211 m, are presented in Table 6-91. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 8.00 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 8–211 m.

Comments on the test

Weak indications of a response to pumping were detected in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 0.5 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 9 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. The pressure was decreasing already prior to the pump start, but there is still a change in the slope of the pressure curve in connection with the start of pumping. There is also a slight recovery of c. 0.05 m measured during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days. The recovery may be masked by the continued naturally decreasing pressure trend.

6.2.92 Observation section KFM02A: 0–132 m

In Figure 6-32 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM02A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM02A, 0–132 m, are presented in Table 6-92. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 11.80 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 12–132 m.

Comments on the test

A relatively clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 0.6 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 17 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 0.1 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

Comments on the test

A relatively clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 0.6 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 17 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 0.1 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.94 Observation section KFM02A: 241–410 m

In Figure 6-32 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM02A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM02A, 241–410 m, are presented in Table 6-94.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 1.3 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 9.5 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 0.7 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.97 Observation section KFM02A: 490–518 m

In Figure 6-32 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM02A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM02A, 490–518 m, are presented in Table 6-97.

Comments on the test

A clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 1.5 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 78 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 1.2 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.98 Observation section KFM02A: 519–888 m

In Figure 6-32 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM02A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM02A, 519–888 m, are presented in Table 6-98.

Comments on the test

A relatively clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 0.7 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 14 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 0.3 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.99 Observation section KFM02A: 889–1,002 m

In Figure 6-32 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM02A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM02A, 889–1,002 m, are presented in Table 6-99.

Comments on the test

It is not likely that this section responded to the pumping in HFM14. Even though there is a drawdown recorded, it is probable that it is only an effect of a natural trend. Still, the total drawdown during the flow period was c. 0.4 m. There was a total recovery of c. 0.03 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days. It should be noted that the tidal effects make it difficult to deduce representative values on the hydraulic head at the start and stop of the flow period, respectively.

6.2.100 Observation section HFM05: 0–200 m

In Figure 6-33 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM05 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM05, 0–200 m, are presented in Table 6-100. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 11.87 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 12–200 m.

Comments on the test

The pressure data from this section displays a periodic behaviour and even though it is unlikely that the section is affected by the pumping in HFM14 there may be a response disguised behind the general appearance of the pressure curve. It is however probably more likely that the possible trend is natural and not caused by the pumping in HFM14. No real conclusion can be drawn about this observation section. The reason for the displayed behaviour is not known.

6.2.101 Observation section HFM04: 0–57 m

In Figure 6-34 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM04 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM04, 0–57 m, are presented in Table 6-101. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 12.12 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 12–57 m.

Comments on the test

The pressure data from this section are a little scattered and strongly influenced by tidal effects rendering interpretation more difficult. It seems clear however, that this section is affected by the pumping in HFM14. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 0.6 m. A drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 17 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. Only a change of slope in the pressure curve indicates that the recovery period has started. No actual pressure recovery is registered.

In Figure 6-34 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM04 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM04, 58–66 m, are presented in Table 6-102.

Comments on the test

A relatively clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 0.5 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 15 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 0.1 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

Comments on the test

A relatively clear response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 0.5 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 17.5 hours after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 0.09 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 6 days.

6.2.104 Observation section HFM12: 0–56.5 m

In Figure 6-35 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM12 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM12, 0–56.5 m, are presented in Table 6-104. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 14.90 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 15–57 m.

Comments on the test

The pressure data from this observation section are very noisy. Furthermore, data are completely missing for long periods of time. It is not possible to make any reliable interpretation from these data. From inspection of the pressure curve however, Figure 6-35, it seems probable that the section is slightly influenced by pumping in HFM14. The reason for the missing data are due to poor transmission via the radio link that is used to transfer data from the site to the HMS-data base. Since a lot of data are missing the pressure values at pump stop and test stop presented in Table 6-104 are from 2006-07-18 09:32 and 2006-06-31 09:05.

6.2.106 Observation section HFM11: 0–53 m

In Figure 6-36 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM11 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM11, 0–53 m, are presented in Table 6-106. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 11.90 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 12–53 m.

Comments on the test

The pressure data from this observation section are very noisy. Furthermore, data are completely missing for long periods of time. It is not possible to make any reliable interpretation from these data. From inspection of the pressure curve however, Figure 6-36, it seems possible that the section is slightly influenced by pumping in HFM14. The pressure prior to pumping start displays a decreasing trend making it even more difficult to say anything about the possible response in this section. The reason for the missing data are due to poor transmission via the radio link that is used to transfer data from the site to the HMS-data base. Since a lot of data are missing the pressure value at pump stop presented in Table 6-106 is from 2006-07-18.

Comments on the test

The pressure data from this observation section are very noisy. Furthermore, data are completely missing for long periods of time. It is not possible to make any reliable interpretation from these data. From inspection of the pressure curve however, Figure 6-36, it seems probable that the section is slightly influenced by pumping in HFM14. The reason for the missing data is due to poor transmission via the radio link that is used to transfer data from the site to the HMS-data base. Since a lot of data are missing the pressure value at pump stop presented in Table 6-107 is from 2006-07-18.

6.2.108 Observation section HFM18: 0–27 m

In Figure 6-37 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM18 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM18, 0–27 m, are presented in Table 6-108. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 9.00 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 9–27 m.

Comments on the test

It is very hard to tell if this section is responding to the pumping in HFM14. Prior to the start of pumping a strong trend of decreasing pressure is present. This trend continues during the entire flow period, but the slope is moving towards the horizontal a few days into the pumping period. The only sign that this section is possibly affected by the pumping is a slight pressure increase in conjunction with the start of recovery. The actual response, if there is any, is likely to be much weaker than indicated by the figures presented in Table 6-108.

Comments on the test

It is very hard to tell if this section is responding to the pumping in HFM14. Prior to the start of pumping a strong trend of decreasing pressure is present. ### 6.2.110 Observation section HFM18: 42–180 m

In Figure 6-37 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole HFM18 is shown. General test data from the observation section HFM18, 42–180 m, are presented in Table 6-110.

Comments on the test

It is very hard to tell if this section is responding to the pumping in HFM14. Prior to the start of pumping a strong trend of decreasing pressure is present. This trend continues during the entire flow period, but the slope is moving towards the horizontal a few days into the pumping period. The only sign that this section is possibly affected by the pumping is a slight pressure increase in conjunction with the start of recovery. This may, however, be a sole effect of the precipitation that was observed at that time, cf. Figure A2-10 in Appendix 2. The actual response, if there is any, is likely to be much weaker than indicated by the figures presented in Table 6-110.

6.3 Interference test 2 in HFM14

A second, shorter interference test was performed to be able to include observation borehole KFM10A in the analysis.

The measured drawdowns ($s_p$) at the end of the flow period and the estimated response time lags ($dt_L$) from borehole KFM10A are included in Tables 6-114 and 6-115, respectively. The response time is defined as the time lag after start of pumping until a drawdown response of 0.01 m was observed in the actual observation section. Only KFM10A was analysed from the second pumping and therefore the results from the first and second pumping are not completely compatible. Since the flow rate was relatively similar it may still, however, be relevant to make some comparisons and therefore the results from the second pumping will be reported in some of the same tables and diagrams as the results from the first pumping.

All pressure data reported in this report have been corrected for atmospheric pressure changes by subtracting the latter pressure from the measured (absolute) pressure. This is also true for the data received from the HMS. All times presented are Swedish summer times, i.e. adjustment for daylight saving time has been made for any reported times.

During the 9$^{th}$ of September approximately 10 mm of total precipitation was reported from stations in the vicinity of the boreholes included in the test. No effect of this can be observed in the observation sections.

No transient evaluation of either the pumping borehole or the observation sections have been performed for this test.

6.3.1 Pumping borehole HFM14: 0–150 m

General test data for the shorter, second pumping test in HFM14 are presented in Table 6-111. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 6.0 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 6–150 m.

Comments on the test

The test was performed as a constant-flow rate pumping test. Since the flow meter was out of order the mean flow rate was estimated to be the same as the final flow rate at c. 347 L/min and the duration of the flow period was c. 3 days. After approximately half a day the pressure curve is changing appearance slightly and the pressure is decreasing at a slightly higher rate for a while. The pressure curve then flattens out after another half a day and past that point it is slowly going towards, but never reaching, a stationary level. The final drawdown in HFM14 was approximately 12 m. The pressure recovery was measured for almost 2 days. Overviews of the pressure response in HFM14 are presented in Figures 6-38.

6.3.2 Observation section KFM10A: 0–400 m

In Figure 6-39 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM10A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM10A, 0–400 m, are presented in Table 6-112. According to Table 3-1, the borehole is cased to 60.39 m. The uncased interval of this section is thus c. 60–400 m.

Comments on the test

This observation section appears to be completely unaffected by the pumping in HFM14. The pressure is increasing during the entire test period.

6.3.3 Observation section KFM10A: 401–500 m

In Figure 6-39 an overview of the pressure responses in observation borehole KFM10A is shown. General test data from the observation section KFM10A, 401–500 m, are presented in Table 6-113.

Comments on the test

An obvious response to pumping was recorded in this section. The total drawdown during the flow period was c. 5.3 m and a drawdown of 0.01 m was reached approximately 3.5 minutes after the pumping started in HFM14. There was a total recovery of c. 4.8 m during the recovery period that lasted for approximately 44 hours.

6.4 Response analysis

A response analysis according to the methodology description for interference tests was made. However, because there was only one test performed, no response matrix was prepared. Nor are the wells monitoring the quaternary deposits, Figures A4-1 and A4-2, included in the response analysis. The response time lags ($dt_L$) in the observation sections during pumping in HFM14 are shown in Table 6-114. The lag times were derived from the uncorrected drawdown curves in the observation borehole sections at an actual drawdown of 0.01 m. No corrections of the drawdown for the decreasing natural trend during the interference tests or other corrections of drawdown have been made. Because of the oscillating behaviour of the measured pressure in some of the observation sections, see for instance Figure 6-17a, it was difficult to determine the exact time to reach a 0.01 m drawdown. It was possible, however, to make an approximate estimate from the drawdown curves.

Only observation sections in which an assumed, relatively clear, pressure response was recorded are included in the response analysis. In Tables 6-114 and 6-115 only sections comprised in the response analysis are presented, that is only sections showing a reasonably clear response to pumping in HFM14. An exception to this is borehole KFM06A where very weak responses were detected in two of the deep sections, cf Figure 6-17b. Even though these responses are weaker than some that are excluded from the response analysis, they are of such interest due to their deep location that they are still included in the response analysis.

It must be emphasized that section KFM10A: 401–500 that was only observed during the shorter second interference test is still included in the response analysis. This is possible since the same pumping borehole was used and the flow rate was very similar to that of the first interference test. Since the conditions, naturally, were not identical in the two tests the comparison must, however, be regarded as approximate.

The normalized response time with respect to the distance to the pumping borehole was calculated. This time is inversely related to the hydraulic diffusivity (T/S) of the formation. Also the inverse of above mentioned parameter was calculated since it is more closely related to the hydraulic diffusivity. In addition, the normalized drawdown with respect to the flow rate was calculated and is presented in Table 6-115.

In Figure 6-40 a response diagram, showing the presumptive responding observation sections, is presented. In this figure the observation sections are represented by different symbols. In the response diagram, observation sections represented by data points lying to the left generally indicate a better connectivity, a higher hydraulic diffusivity, in regard to the pumping borehole section than sections represented by data points further to the right in the diagram.

The following parameters are used in Tables 6-114 and 6-115 as well as in Figures 6-40 to 6-42:

$dt_L[s=0.01\ m] / r_s^2$ = normalized response time with respect to the distance $r_s$ ($s/m^2$),

$dt_L[s=0.01\ m]$ = time after start of pumping (s) at a drawdown s=0.01 m in the observation section,

$r_s$ = 3D-distance between the hydraulic point of application (hydr. p.a.) in the pumping borehole and observation borehole (m),

$s_p/Q_p$ = normalized drawdown with respect to the pumping flow rate ($s/m^2$),

$s_p$ = drawdown at stop of pumping in the actual observation borehole/section (m),

$Q_p$ = pumping flow rate by the end of the flow period ($m^3/s$).

The (normalized) response time lag for many of the observation sections included in the interference test, where a response was detected, must be considered as rough estimates. The main reason for this is, as mentioned above, the difficulty to make an estimate of this parameter due to the oscillating pressure.

The response diagram in Figure 6-40 together with diagrams 6-41 and 6-42 can be used to group observation sections by the strength of their responses and so the observation sections with the most distinct responses can be identified. Figure 6-40 indicates that the largest drawdown was found in section HFM15: 0–84 m and the weakest response in section KFM08B: 0–70 m. The most delayed response occurred in section KFM01A: 0–108 m. As mentioned above, sections KFM06A: 738–748 and KFM06A: 749–826 are included in the response diagrams even though their responses are very weak. They are still of interest due to the depth of the sections.

Some of the sections that are found in the upper left part of Figure 6-40 are likely to represent sections with more or less direct responses along fracture zones between borehole HFM14 and the actual observations sections.

Figure 6-41 displays the same parameters as in the response diagram, but in a different type of diagram. In this diagram a third index is also displayed, i.e. the ratio between the two indices in the response diagram. Clearly, sections with higher ratios correspond to sections which are hydraulically well connected to the pumping borehole. In the diagram, all observation sections that responded clearly to pumping in HFM14 but one are included. In Figure 6-41 observation section KFM01A: 0–108 m is not included. This section demonstrates the weakest and most uncertain response, which can be observed in the response diagram (Figure 6-40) and is excluded to clarify the diagram. All other sections are ranked so that sections showing the weakest responses are located to the left in the diagram and observation sections with stronger responses are located to the right. The diagram is actually divided into two separate figures to make room for all sections.

Another version of Figure 6-41 is displayed in Figure 6-42. The units on the axes are somewhat different even though this figure is indicating the same phenomenon as is shown in Figure 6-41.

Two observation sections stand out as responding most strongly. These sections, KFM10A: 401–500 m and HFM15: 85–95 m, together with 6 other sections, HFM15: 0–84 m, HFM19: 168–182 m, KFM01B: 0–100 m, HFM13: 0–100 m, HFM19: 104–167 m and KFM01B: 101–141 m, demonstrate responses that are distinct enough to be characterized as potential zone responses between HFM14 and the actual sections.

6.5 Evaluation of responses in selected sections

Quantitative transient evaluation was made for five selected observation sections, decided upon in consultation with the activity leader. Due to the strong natural decreasing pressure trend during the interference tests the drawdown in these sections was corrected for the natural trend before the analysis. A linear correction was applied based on the linear drawdown diagrams presented above. Only the drawdown period was analysed.

In addition, estimation of the hydraulic diffusivity of these sections was made from the response time lag. The time lags were estimated from the corrected drawdown curves. Comparison was made of the estimated hydraulic diffusivity from the time lag and from the transient test evaluation, respectively.

Abbreviations of flow regimes and hydraulic boundaries that may appear in the text:

WBS = Wellbore storage

PRF = Pseudo-radial Flow regime

PLF = Pseudo-linear flow regime

PSF = Pseudo-spherical flow regime

PSS = Pseudo-stationary flow regime

NFB = No-flow boundary

CHB = Constant – head boundary

6.5.1 Observation section HFM13: 159–173 m

Interpreted flow regimes

The drawdown period is dominated by a pseudo-spherical (leaky) flow regime or possibly a constant-head boundary (CHB) which is reached approximately $4 \cdot 10^5$ seconds into the drawdown period and then lingers until the end of the period.

Interpreted parameters

Transient evaluation of the drawdown period was chosen as the most representative and only results from this period are presented in this report. The transient evaluation was performed using the Hantush-Jacob model for confined leaky aquifers. Transient, quantitative interpretation of the drawdown period is shown in a log-log diagram in Figure A2-5, Appendix 2. The results from the transient evaluation are summarized in Table 6-120.

According to Table 6-114 the section has a relatively bad hydraulic connection to the pumping borehole HFM14. This makes the evaluation quite uncertain and possibly not representative of the formation close to the observation section.

6.5.2 Observation section KFM04A: 169–1,001 m

Interpreted flow regimes

The dominating flow regime during the flow period is interpreted to be pseudo-spherical (leaky).

Interpreted parameters

Transient evaluation of the flow period was chosen as the most representative and only results from this period are presented in this report. The transient evaluation was performed using the Hantush-Jacob model for confined leaky aquifers. Transient, quantitative interpretation of the flow period is shown in a log-log diagram in Figure A2-6, Appendix 2. The results from the transient evaluation are summarized in Table 6-120.

The section has a rather bad hydraulic connection to the pumping borehole HFM14, cf. Figure 6-40. This makes the evaluation quite uncertain and probably not representative of the formation close to the observation section. It is very likely that the estimated transmissivity and storativity actually reflect the conditions close to the pumping borehole HFM14 rather than in the vicinity of the observation section.

Interpreted flow regimes

A transition period to a PSF is dominating the entire flow period.

Interpreted parameters

Transient evaluation of the flow period was chosen as the most representative and only results from this period are presented in this report. The transient evaluation was performed using the Hantush-Jacob model for confined leaky aquifers. Transient, quantitative interpretation of the flow period is shown in a log-log diagram in Figure A2-7, Appendix 2. The results from the transient evaluation are summarized in Table 6-120.

The section has a rather bad hydraulic connection to the pumping borehole HFM14, cf. Figure 6-40. This makes the evaluation quite uncertain and probably not representative of the formation close to the observation section. It is very likely that the estimated transmissivity and storativity actually reflect the conditions close to the pumping borehole HFM14 rather than around the observation section. This assumption is also supported by the fact that the evaluated transmissivity is very similar to that from previous single-hole investigations in the pumping borehole.

Interpreted flow regimes

A transition period to a PSF is dominating the entire flow period.

Interpreted parameters

Transient evaluation of the flow period was chosen as the most representative and only results from this period are presented in this report. The transient evaluation was performed using the Hantush-Jacob model for confined leaky aquifers. Transient, quantitative interpretation of the flow period is shown in a log-log diagram in Figure A2-8, Appendix 2. The results from the transient evaluation are summarized in Table 6-120.

The section has a relatively bad hydraulic connection to the pumping borehole HFM14. This makes the evaluation quite uncertain and possibly not representative of the formation close to the observation section. It is very probable that the evaluated parameters for transmissivity and storativity actually reflect the conditions close to the pumping borehole HFM14 rather than the formation close to the observation section, leading to an overestimation of the transmissivity compared to the results of the previous single-hole tests. This assumption is also supported by the fact that the evaluated transmissivity is very similar to that from previous single-hole investigations in the pumping borehole.

Interpreted flow regimes

The response of this section is very similar to that of KFM02A: 411–442. A transition period to a PSF is dominating the entire flow period.

Interpreted parameters

Transient evaluation of the flow period was chosen as the most representative and only results from this period are presented in this report. The transient evaluation was performed using the Hantush-Jacob model for confined leaky aquifers. Transient, quantitative interpretation of the flow period is shown in a log-log diagram in Figure A2-9 and Figure A2-10, Appendix 2. The results from the transient evaluation are summarized in Table 6-120.

The section has a relatively bad hydraulic connection to the pumping borehole HFM14. This makes the evaluation quite uncertain and possibly not representative of the formation close to the observation section. It is very probable that the evaluated parameters for transmissivity and storativity actually reflect the conditions close to the pumping borehole HFM14 rather than the rock volume around the observation section, leading to an overestimation of the transmissivity. This assumption is also supported by the fact that the evaluated transmissivity is similar to that obtained in previous single-hole tests of the pumping borehole.

6.5.6 Estimation of the hydraulic diffusivity of the sections

The hydraulic diffusivity of observation sections can be estimated from the response time lag in the section according to Streltsova (1988):

The time lag $dt_L$ is based on a drawdown s=0.01 m in the observation section. The estimated time lags based on the corrected drawdown in the selected sections are shown in Table 6-116 together with the corresponding hydraulic diffusivity T/S of the sections. For comparison, the ratio of the estimated transmissivity and storativity $T_o/S_o$ from the transient evaluation of the responses in these sections during the interference tests are also presented.

Table 6-116. Estimated response lag times and hydraulic diffusivity for the selected observation sections from the interference tests in HFM14 at Forsmark.

| Pumping borehole | Observation borehole | Section (m) | Measured $dt_L$[s=0.01 m] (s) | Corrected $dt_L$[s=0.01 m] (s) | $r_s$ (m) | T/S ($m^2$/s) | $T_o$ /$S_o$ ($m^2$/s) |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| HFM14 | HFM13 | 159–173 | $1.04 \cdot 10^{4}$ | $1.5 \cdot 10^{4}$ | 297 | $3.0 \cdot 10^{-1}$ | $1.2 \cdot 10^{-1}$ |
| HFM14 | KFM02A | 411–442 | $1.04 \cdot 10^{4}$ | $1.3 \cdot 10^{4}$ | 1,594 | $9.8 \cdot 10^{0}$ | $1.6 \cdot 10^{1}$ |
| HFM14 | KFM02A | 490–518 | $4.65 \cdot 10^{3}$ | $1.0 \cdot 10^{4}$ | 1,609 | $1.2 \cdot 10^{1}$ | $2.1 \cdot 10^{1}$ |
| HFM14 | KFM04A | 169–1,001 | $3.92 \cdot 10^{4}$ | $4.2 \cdot 10^{4}$ | 773 | $9.2 \cdot 10^{-1}$ | $1.5 \cdot 10^{0}$ |
| HFM14 | KFM06A | 341–362 | $6.49 \cdot 10^{4}$ | $6.5 \cdot 10^{4}$ | 810 | $7.2 \cdot 10^{-1}$ | $6.5 \cdot 10^{-1}$ |

Table 6-116 shows that there is a rather good agreement between the estimated hydraulic diffusivity of the sections based on the response time lags and from the results of the transient evaluation, respectively, also at long distances from the pumping borehole. This is also illustrated in Figure 6-43. However, as discussed above, the estimated transmissivities from the interference tests differ significantly from the results of the previous single-hole tests in these sections.

6.6 Summary of the results of the interference test

A compilation of measured test data from the interference test in HFM14 is shown in Tables 6-117 and 6-118. In Tables 6-119 and 6-120 calculated hydraulic parameters for the pumping borehole and five observation sections selected for quantitative evaluation are presented.

Out of the 105 observation sections included in the interference test, 27 did not respond at all to pumping in HFM14 or responded very weakly. Of the remaining 78 sections, 69 showed distinct responses. Two observation sections stand out as responding most strongly. These sections, KFM10A: 401–500 m and HFM15: 85–95 m, together with 6 other sections, HFM15: 0–84 m, HFM19: 168–182 m, KFM01B: 0–100 m, HFM13: 0–100 m, HFM19: 104–167 m and KFM01B: 101–141m, display responses that are distinct enough to be characterized as potential zone responses between HFM14 and the actual sections. In KFM06A, section 363–737 m is clearly affected by the pumping in HFM14. Also the deeper sections 738–748 m and 749–826 m are slightly affected by the pumping.

The estimated T-value for HFM14 in Table 6-119 from transient evaluation is in good agreement with that ($T=4.7\cdot10^{-4}$ $m^2/s$) from the previous single-hole pumping test and flow logging in this borehole, /1/. The estimated transmissivities from observation sections KFM02A: 411–442 m, KFM02A: 490–518 m and KFM06A: 341–362 m are significantly higher than the T-values obtained from single-hole tests from previous investigations (/14/ and /12/), cf. Table 3-4. This fact may possibly be due to that the calculated T-values from the interference tests are more weighted towards the hydraulic properties close to the pumping borehole HFM14 because of the long distances between the boreholes. In addition, the estimated transmissivity in the observation sections may be overestimated from the interference test due to poor hydraulic connection to the pumping borehole, cf. Figures 6-40, 6-41 and 6-42. This is especially true for the observation sections in KFM06A.

The results of the interference tests show a rather good agreement between the estimated hydraulic diffusivity of the sections based on the response time lags and from the results of the transient evaluation, respectively, also at long distances from the pumping borehole. However, as discussed above, the estimated transmissivities from the interference tests differ significantly from the results of the previous single-hole tests in these sections. This fact may indicate that transmissivity and storativity cannot always be estimated individually but only the hydraulic diffusivity T/S from interference tests in heterogeneous formations, particularly at long distances from the pumping borehole. Transmissivity and storativity can probably only be estimated individually for observation sections having a very good hydraulic connection to the pumping borehole.

Q/s = specific flow for the pumping/injection borehole.

$T_M$ = steady state transmissivity from Moye’s equation.

$T_T$ = transmissivity from transient evaluation of single-hole test.

$T_o$ = transmissivity from transient evaluation of interference test.

$S_o$ = storativity from transient evaluation of interference test.

$T_o/S_o$ = hydraulic diffusivity ($m^2$/s).

K’/b’ = leakage coefficient from transient evaluation of interference test.

S* = assumed storativity by the estimation of the skin factor in single hole tests.

C = wellbore storage coefficient.

ζ = skin factor.

List of data files

Files are named: Interferenstest_Pumphål_”BhID”_”YYYYMMDD”_”hhmm”_”File Type”. Interferenstest_Pumphål is just an internal marker. “BhID” is the name of the borehole, after that the datafile start time is given. Pumpin and Ref_Da are parts of the original file names produced by the HTHB data logger. Ref_Da contains constants of calibration and background data. Pumpin contains data from pumping tests (no combined flow logging).

Nomenclature for AQTESOLV:

T = transmissivity ($m^2/s$)

S = storativity (–)

$K_Z/K_r$ = ratio of hydraulic conductivities in the vertical and radial direction (set to 1)

Sw = skin factor

r(w) = borehole radius (m) r(c) = effective casing radius (m) r/B = leakage coefficient ($s^{-1}$)

b = thickness of formation (m)

Size of hydraulic feature estimated as radius of influence based on t2. ( Size of feature somewhat under estimated using t2- but error considered as small.) |
| bc_s | S-BC | | Calculated by using S if S=value or S=f(T) if S*=value |
| leakage_factor_lf | $L_f$ | m | Leakage factor. $L_f = (K \cdot b \cdot c_f)^{0.5}$ where K represents the aquifer conditions. $c_f$ = b´/K´ based on 1D linear flow model. Considered best estimate from transient evaluation of flow period or recovery period. |
| transmissivity_tt | $T_T$ | $m^2/s$ | Transmissivity (T) of formation, based on 2D radial flow model. Considered best estimate from transient evaluation of flow period or recovery period. |
| value_type_tt | | | Code for $T_T$; –1 means $T_T$ < lower measurement limit, 0 means measured value,–1 means $T_T$ >upper measurement limit. |
| l_measl_q_s | Q/s-measl-L | $m^2/s$ | Estimated measurement limit for evaluated T ($T_T$, $T_Q$, $T_M$). If estimated T equals Q/s-measl in the table actual T is considered to be equal or less than Q/s-measl |
| u_measl_q_s | Q/s-measl-U | $m^2/s$ | Estimated measurement limit for evaluated T ($T_T$, $T_Q$, $T_M$). If estimated T equals Q/s-measl in the table actual T is considered to be equal or grater than Q/s-measl |
| storativity_s | S | (–) | Storativity (Storage coefficient) of formation based on 2D radial flow model. Considered best estimate from transient evaluation of flow period or recovery period. |
| assumed_s | S* | | Assumed storativity of formation based on 2D radial flow model. |
| leakage_koeff | K´/b´ | (1/s) | Leakage coefficient evaluated from 2D radial flow model. K´= hydraulic conductivity across the aquitard, b´ = water saturated thickness of aquitard (leaky formation). Considered best estimate from transient evaluation of flow period or recovery period. |
| hydr_kond_ksf | $K_{sf}$ | m/s | Hydraulic conductivity of formation, based on 3D spherical flow model. Considered best estimate from transient evaluation of flow period or recovery period. |
| value_type_ksf | | | Code for $K_{Sf}$; –1 means $K_{Sf}$ < lower measurement limit, 0 means measured value,–1 means $K_{Sf}$ >upper measurement limit. |
| l_measl_ksf | $K_S$-measl-L | m/s | Estimated lower measurement limit for evaluated $K_{sf}$. |
| u_measl_ksf | $K_S$-measl-U | m/s | Estimated upper measurement limit for evaluated $K_{sf}$. |

| SICADA header | Header | Unit | Explanation |
|---|---|---|---|
| spec_storage_ss | $S_{sf}$ | 1/m | Specific storage of formation based on 3D spherical flow model. Considered best estimate from transient evaluation of flow period or recovery period. |
| assumed_ss | $S_{sf}$* | 1/m | Assumed specific storage of formation based on 3D spherical flow model. |
| c | C | ($m^3$/Pa) | Wellbore storage coefficient. Considered best estimate from transient evaluation of flow period or recovery period. |
| cd | $C_D$ | (–) | Dimensionless wellbore storage coefficient, $C_D = C \cdot \rho_w g /(2\pi \cdot S \cdot r_w^2)$. |
| skin | $\xi$ | | Skin factor. Considered best estimate from transient evaluation of flow period or recovery period. |
| dt1 | $dt_1$ | s | Estimated start time after pump/injection start or recovery start, for the period used for the evaluated parameter |
| dt1 | $dt_2$ | s | Estimated stop time after pump/injection start or recovery start, for the period used for the evaluated parameter |
| dte1 | $dt_{e1}$ | | Start time for evaluated parameter from start of recovery period. |
| dte2 | $dt_{e2}$ | | Stop time for evaluated parameter from start of recovery period. |
| t1 | $t_1$ | | Start time for evaluated parameter from start of flow period. |
| t2 | $t_2$ | | Stop time for evaluated parameter from start of flow period. |
| p_horner | p* | | Horner extrapolated pressure (used as an estimation of natural pressure of the test section) |
| transmissivity_t_nlr | $T_{ILR}$ | $m^2$/s | Transmissivity, based on Non Linear Regression of the entire test sequence. |
| storativity_s_nlr | $S_{ILR}$ | (–) | Storativity, based on Non Linear Regression of the entire test sequence. |
| c_nlr | $C_{ILR}$ | ($m^3$/Pa) | Wellbore storage coefficient, based on Non Linear Regression of entire test sequence. |
| cd_nlr | $C_{D,ILR}$ | | Dimensionless wellbore storage coefficient, based on Non Linear Regression of entire test sequence. |
| skin_nlr | $\xi_{NLR}$ | | Skin factor, based on Non Linear Regression of entire test sequence. |
| transmissivity_t_grf | $T_{GRF}$ | $m^2$/s | Transmissivity, based on the Generalized Radial Flow model /Baker 1988/. Considered best estimate from transient evaluation of flow period or recovery period. |
| storativity_s_grf | $S_{GRF}$ | (–) | Storativity, based on Generalised Radial Flow model. Considered best estimate from transient evaluation of flow period or recovery period. |
| flow_dim_grf | $D_{GRF}$ | (–) | Inferred flow dimension, based on the Generalized Radial Flow model /Barker 1988/. Considered best estimate from transient evaluation of flow period or recovery period. |

Monitoring wells in Quaternary deposits

Some monitoring wells in Quaternary deposits were included in the first interference test. The observations in these wells were included at a late stage and are therefore reported separately in this appendix.

In Figure A4-1 an overview of the groundwater levels in the included wells in Quaternary deposits is shown.

In SFM058 data are not available for the entire period of the interference test. It seems, however, evident that the well is responding to the pumping in HFM14. Also SFM001, SFM013 and SFM030 are visibly affected by the pumping in HFM14. The last two wells; SFM023 and SFM062 appear to be reacting to the pumping as well, although not as strongly. In all cases, a trend of declining groundwater levels before the start of pumping complicates the estimation of the real extent of the drawdown.

Pumping for water sampling disturbed the groundwater level in SFM023 during the flow period of the interference test, resulting in the dip of the level curve in Figure A4-1.

In Figure A4-2, a map showing the geographic locations of the monitoring wells in Quaternary deposits is displayed.

Appendix 5

Correction of head and drawdown for natural trend

During the entire period of the interference test in HFM14 a strong, decreasing natural head trend was ongoing. The data from drawdown period were corrected for the natural trend using the graphical technique described in Figure A5-1. The onset of the correction was assumed at start of pumping. After test stop the data acquisition continued and the actual head trend during this period was assumed to represent the existing natural head trend during the entire test period. Extrapolation of this trend backward coincides approximately to the head at start of pumping. A linear trend correction with time was determined individually for all responding observation sections according to Equation (A5-1) and applied to the drawdown period. The total correction at stop of pumping is denoted corr($t_p$). The corrected drawdown $s(t)_{corr}$ at time t is calculated according to Equation (A5-2).

$s(t)_{corr}$ = corrected drawdown at time t after start of pumping (m)

$s(t)$ = measured drawdown at time t after start of pumping (m)

$corr(t)$ =applied correction at time t after start of pumping (m)

$corr(t_p)$ =applied correction at time $t_p$ at stop of pumping (m)

$t_p$ = duration of drawdown period (s)

Data files with time and corrected head and drawdown for all responding observation sections were prepared and stored in Sicada. In addition, a data file with time, flow rate and drawdown in the pumping borehole HFM14 was prepared and stored in Sicada. The data files can be identified from the Activity Plan (AP PF 400-06-038).

In Table A5-1 the measured and corrected final drawdown together with the corrected normalized drawdown for the responding observation sections during the interference test in HFM14 are shown. In KFM06C the head recovery was used since no representative drawdown could be calculated in this borehole, see Section 6.2.54. No corrections are applied of the recovery of the head in these borehole sections. The corrected drawdown data are used together with the original data in Table 6-114 for preparation of a corrected response diagram, Figure A5-2, similar to Figure 6-40 for uncorrected data. The estimated response times for the responding sections were not updated after the correction of the drawdown since the response times were not significantly altered by the correction.

Instructions

SICADA Data Import Template (simplified version)

This template should be used to supply information for the creation of new activities of a certain type (activity type), along with associated measurement data, in the SICADA database.

Information about the selected activity type that this template is intended for is included at the top of this worksheet.

Cells that have a red marker in its upper right corner have a description associated with it. Either select or move the mouse over the cell to see the text.

The Activity Data Sheet

For each activity to be created, supply information in the columns Idcode, Start Date, Stop Date, Secup, Seclow and Section No. Additional activity attributes should be provided for each created activity. Please enter the appropriate activity attributes for each activity with appropriate information.

The selected set of additional activity attributes included in this file is choosen when this file is generated from SICADA.

The Data Table Sheet(s)

Measurement data associated to each created activity can be supplied. Each data table has its own worksheet in this Excel workbook.

The selected set of tables (and columns) included in this file is choosen when this file is generated from SICADA. The pre-filled set of tables (worksheets) and columns should not be altered to guarantee that this file can be imported to SICADA when completed.

Each entered data row must be connected to an activity. The connection is done by supplying values for idcode, start_date,

|---|---|
| | stop_date, secup, seclow and section_no on each data row. It is convenient to copy these values from the corresponding activity row in the Activity Data worksheet.Information about each table and its columns can be found in the respective worksheet. |
